THE SCHOOL REPORT.

This should mean much more than the statistics of weeks of school, number of scholars, studies pursued, wages paid and money expended. While this is essential, it is subsidiary to other considerations. The question, "What is the purpose of our schools?" has not yet been answered. They sustain a very important relation to the individual and society; but just what this relation is, neither the individual or society have definitely settled. As far as the schools are a necessity to the matter of what is termed getting a living, it is something quite insignificant; men without the privilege of the school, have become very thrifty and made themselves very prominent; men without the opportunity of the schools would learn to plan and execute. They would learn to reckon and to keep memorandums. They would have some system of accounts and something that would be to them in the place of writing. Character is the particular matter that school has to do with. While the school is helpful in broadening life and giving it flexibility and diversity, its highest function is to determine character. What the state needs, what the individual needs is character.

While the school primarily deals with what is usually termed the qualifications for getting a living, this is not its legitimate mission, which is to so touch character as to enlarge, strengthen and purify, and thus ennoble the individual and social life.

THE PAST YEAR.

This has been one of large success in the schools. It is rare that the school work as a whole has been so good and brought so much to the welfare of the young, the ennobling of their real life, and the honor of the town. In the true education of the young, conduct is the first thing to be considered. The welfare of the state is determined by the conduct of the pupils of the schools. The foundations of a republic are the truth, integrity and righteous principles of the youth in its schools.

The government of our towns, state and nation, will be as that of the schools. Public conduct, private conduct and all conduct will be what that of the schools is. Is there rudeness in the schools, there will be rudeness in society. Is there trickery in the schools, there will be the same thing in the business of the community. Do scholars cheat in their lessons and in the other exercises of the schools, then they will cheat when the responsibilities of public welfare are upon them. Is there a deviation from strict integrity in the relations of school life, then there will be the same thing in future social life. If individual members of school practice deceit and fraud in school affairs, they are in training to do the same things in the larger and higher interests of life. The member of school who would never justify any school fraud, never will screen a culprit in school or justify a school crime, will never defraud his employer, or have anything to do with that which is termed boodle in politics. Boys that trifle with school honor, school rights, the pure and sacred things of school, are prepared to trifle with all the sacred, responsible and holy conditions of life. Hence the one and essential purpose of the school is the formation of high character in the young. The question is not so much the keenness of mental as moral perception. The school deficient in order must suffer a mental loss, but this is insignificant compared with the moral loss. Hence school government is a matter of the first importance; in this is involved truth, industry, fidelity, every grace of character and virtue of life.

WHAT IS EDUCATION?

This question admits of a great variety of answers. There are many and diverse conceptions of what it is to be educated. Some would place it in the training of the powers of the mind; others, in the amount of knowledge stored in the mind; but as a condition to the process, there must be aroused in the individual a desire to know, and when that desire is fully aroused, when it has taken full possession of him then we may say the individual is far advanced in what may be termed the process of education, if not in education itself. The awakening or even the creation of this desire is the first thing to be done in the work of education. We may term it a process and then we will say that it must be methodical. Method must be a characteristic of the work of the schools. There is a natural way in which subjects must be presented to the child's mind, varying with the various characteristics of different children, which the teachers must be quick to discern. There are many and valuable helps to education in this day, but none of these can take the place of the wise and judicious teacher.

THE IMPORTANCE OF THE CONTINUOUS TEACHER.

This is important in all stages of education, but especially in the elementary; a change of teachers is a loss and damage in a variety of ways; a true teacher will have some plan in regard to each pupil, which is formed by a study of the pupil's capabilities, peculiarities, needs and possibilities; a plan that came not merely from a week's teaching and acquaintance, nor even a month's, but a term or terms work with him; another teacher, even if more able, has got to spend an equal amount of time to be prepared to enter into the work of her predecessor. A teacher can not be taken from the schoolroom and another put in her place and have the work go on the same. This may be done in the case of a man sawing wood in the school yard. But there is a radical difference in the two kinds of work; and hence if a teacher is doing fair work it is much better to retain such a teacher than to change, especially when the chances are so many that as good a one will not be obtained.

There is nothing in the world that is not susceptible of criticism; nor is there anything more difficult than just criticism; nor are there any positions more liable to unjust criticism than the teachers. There is something in the most symmetrical character that is not to the liking of every one; what suits one does not suit others; hence if there be in the teacher a general purpose of right, teaching that is correct, discipline of some force, and a general consistency and fairness, then a change is not wise.

THOROUGHNESS.

Our schools have been greatly deficient in this.

There has been a hastening over the pages of the text book without comprehending. There is a tendency to send children to school too young ; but when they go to school it must be to work ; children should understand that school hours must be filled with work, real work ; they should not be sent to school until they are mature enough for this, then they should form the habit of study and self control ; one of the first processes in education is self control. It is the essential thing in the formation of right character. And a sad defect in our schools is lack of a habit of study ; a sad thing that so many boys and girls leave our schools with no habits of study. This is not merely the most important matter in connection with education but the one essential thing ; having formed the habit of study the young person is prepared to address himself to the solution of any of the problems of life ; he is prepared to pursue his education by himself in any direction he may desire. These are things that parents should fully understand and they should expect that their children are to fill the hours of the school session with work.

CONSTANCY AND PUNCTUALITY.

Irregularity in attendance is bad for the teacher, the pupil and the school. The value of a school is increased many per cent. by classification. Irregularity in attendance destroys this. The interest that has been awakened in the pupil's mind by the hard, studious labor of the teacher, is dissipated by irregularity. In some homes the circumstances are such that the assistance of the children is needed a day or portion of a day ; while this is unfortunate, the matter might be helped much by a conference with the teacher and an effort made to adjust the necessities of the home with the arrangements of school. But this should never be done except in meeting some absolute necessity of the home. Nothing but such a necessity or actual sickness should ever take a child from his class in school. To do it for any other reason amounts to an actual crime.

THE MAKING UP OF LESSONS.

For the sake of the school as well as the pupil's, this should be insisted upon. The pupil cannot do good work, the school is fearfully disarranged unless this is done. The question whether a child may be allowed to be absent from school a day or part of a day should be determined by whether he can make up his lessons.

THINGS ON WHICH THE WELFARE OF SCHOOL TURNS.

There are many small things of this nature — they will vary with different teachers — things that parents should always favor. Children should not be dismissed unless for good reasons, and the request for the dismissal of the child should be by a note to the teacher containing the reasons. This will be a help to the teacher and a restraint to the scholar.

THE BACKWARD SCHOLAR.

Neither parents or teacher should despair of him. Some children backward in study are forward in other things. Some minds mature earlier than others. Some dull at six or seven, at ten or eleven exhibit scholarly ability. I have some such in mind that greatly interest me. Such need judicious management, there should be no irregularity in their attendance. Plans matured for them at great pains have been completely frustrated by their irregular attendance. Nor are such cases to be helped by permitting them in classes beyond them. They can be helped only by carefully advancing them from the simplest things to those more difficult and making sure that they comprehend ; there is no encouragement to a dull scholar in being where he cannot understand. The greatest incentive to a dull scholar is the delight found in a clear idea ; one clear idea is a great inspiration to a child. The luxury of knowing is the greatest a child can have.

FACILITIES FOR EDUCATION.

These are imperfect especially in rural towns, but notwithstanding the imperfections they are great, far in advance of former years. The problem of the schools in these towns is difficult, but it will find its solution in the consolidation and gradation of the schools, in conjunction with state aid. The parent and scholar must help themselves. The opportunities that the least favored have today, would have been considered fine half a century ago. We improve and value our opportunities as we toil and labor for them. And the school will be valued and improved, according to what the parent does to have his children there, according to the personal effort he makes in their behalf. And while there is much more that should be done for the school by the state, we must ever keep in mind that it will be a damage to do so much that the parent will have nothing to do.

SEVENTH ANNUAL REPORT OF THE
PELHAM FREE PUBLIC LIBRARY.

TRUSTEES' REPORT.

The time has arrived when it again becomes necessary for the library trustees to make their annual report.

The history of the library for the past year, although quiet and uneventful, has yet, we take pleasure in saying, been a history of steady progress. The growth of the library, though slow, is still a growth, and, considering the limited amount of the appropriation available for the purchase of books, it has been, on the whole, satisfactory.

There have been 179 new books added to the library during the past year, as appears in the librarian's report, an increase over last year of 69 books, and we very much regret that the yearly additions may not be more, but unfortunately, in the purchase of books, we have to limit ourselves to our means.

One of the most difficult things we have to contend with is the choice of books in making our purchases, and we are sorry to say that the people fail to show much inclination to aid us in our selections. As we are only the agents of the people in this matter, acting for for them, it seems to us no more than right that they should offer suggestions, and surely every individual must have some preference in regard to the books they wish to read. Once more we take the liberty to remind the towns people that any lists of books which they may see fit to hand in, either to the librarian or the trustees will be gratefully and thankfully received. As it is, as books are really companions, we try to govern ourselves in our choice of books by Cato's advice and only "keep company with the good."

The balance in the hands of the treasurer this year, according to his report, is small, and we hope the town will make a generous appropriation for the use of the library that the usual addition of books for the ensuing year may not be diminished.

Through the generosity of the friends of the library and publishers the reading room has been fairly well supplied with magazines and periodicals and two more magazines, viz: The North American Review and Munsey's, are to be subscribed for immediately and added to those already on the tables.

Once more we avail ourselves of the opportunity to extend our thanks to those who have made donations of books to the library and also to the librarian for her unselfish and efficient services for the past year.

Predicting and foreseeing only continued and increasing development and success for the library this report is respectfully submitted.

SHERMAN HOBBS,
FRANK M. WOODBURY,
GEO. S. BUTLER,
